REASONS FOR JUDGMENT GLEASON C.J.

- [1] The Canadian military justice system differs from the civilian justice system. Both the Supreme Court of Canada and this Court have concluded that many of these differences do not impinge upon the Charter rights of those who are tried in the military justice system: see, for example, R. v. Edwards, 2024 SCC 15 at paras. 15, 71, 82 [Edwards]; R. v. Stillman, 2019 SCC 40, [2019] 3 S.C.R. 144 [Stillman] at paras. 44, 113; R. v. Moriarity, 2015 SCC 55, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 485 at paras. 36-46, 52-56; R. v. J.L., 2024 CMAC 10 at para. 98; R. v. Champion, 2021 CMAC 4 at para. 46; R. v. Royes, 2016 CMAC 1, 8 C.M.A.R. 1 at para. 14. One such difference between the two systems involves the existence of a sentencing regime in the military justice system that is distinct from the sentencing regime applied in civilian courts.
- [2] In this appeal, the prosecution seeks to set aside long-standing case law and have us conclude that the sentencing options open to courts martial include all the discretionary sentencing options open to civilian courts under the Criminal Code, R.S.C., 1985, c. C-46 (the Criminal Code), thereby removing an important difference between the military and civilian justice systems. I would decline to do so and would dismiss this appeal. I. Background [3] To put the issues in this appeal into context, a little background is necessary. At the time of the incidents giving rise to the charges at issue in this appeal, the respondent held the rank of corporal. While driving a military truck in the course of his duties, the respondent drove at approximately 40 kilometres per hour over the posted speed limit and attempted several drifting manoeuvres on gravel roads on a military base. The last of these manoeuvres was unsuccessful and the truck rolled over, injuring two of its occupants, who were members of the Canadian Armed Forces (the CAF). Their injuries were relatively minor ones. However, the truck was a write-off.
- [4] The respondent was charged with two counts of dangerous operation of a motor vehicle causing bodily harm, contrary to section 130 of the National Defence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. N-5 (the NDA) and subsection 320.13(1) of the Criminal Code, and with two counts of dangerous operation of a motor vehicle, contrary to section 130 of the NDA and subsection 320.13(2) of the Criminal Code. The dangerous driving causing bodily harm charges were withdrawn and the respondent pled guilty to the dangerous driving charges. The prosecution and defence made a joint sentencing submission, recommending the imposition of a reduction in rank, a reprimand, and a driving prohibition order for one year pursuant to subsection 320.24(4) of the Criminal Code.

- [5] In reasons reported as Calderon L.C. (Corporal), R. v., 2024 CM 7001, Military Judge Strickey found he did not have jurisdiction to impose the driving prohibition and instead imposed the remaining portions of the joint sentence submission, which both parties agreed would be an appropriate sentence if the Military Judge were to conclude that he lacked jurisdiction to make a driving prohibition order.
- [6] The prosecution appeals from the sentence imposed by the Military Judge and submits that he erred in law in finding he lacked jurisdiction to impose a driving prohibition. The respondent disagrees and submits that the Military Judge was correct in concluding that it was not open to him to impose a driving prohibition. The respondent also asserts that, in any event, the sentence imposed was a fit one and in accordance with the joint submission. He thus submits that this appeal should be disallowed pursuant to section 241 of the NDA, which provides this Court discretion to disallow an appeal, if, in its opinion, expressed in writing, there has been no substantial miscarriage of justice.
- [7] For the reasons that follow, the Military Judge did not err in finding that he lacked jurisdiction to impose the driving prohibition. Therefore, it is not necessary to address the respondent's arguments involving section 241 of the NDA. II. Relevant Statutory Provisions
- [8] It is useful to commence the discussion of the issues that arise in this appeal by laying out the relevant statutory provisions.
- [9] Members of the CAF (and in certain circumstances, other persons as well) are subject to the Code of Service Discipline set out in the NDA. Offences under the Code of Service Discipline are military offences and include those set out in the NDA, the Criminal Code, and other Acts of Parliament. In this regard, subsection 130(1) of the NDA provides as follows: Service trial of civil offences Procès militaire pour infractions civiles 130 (1) An act or omission 130 (1) Constitue une infraction à la présente section tout acte ou omission :
- (a) that takes place in Canada and is punishable under Part VII, the Criminal Code or any other Act of Parliament, or
- a) survenu au Canada et punissable sous le régime de la partie VII de la présente loi, du Code criminel ou de toute autre loi fédérale ;
- (b) that takes place outside Canada and would, if it had taken place in Canada, be punishable under Part VII, the Criminal Code or any other Act of Parliament,
- b) survenu à l'étranger mais qui serait punissable, au Canada, sous le régime de la partie VII de la présente loi, du Code criminel ou de toute autre loi fédérale. is an offence under this Division and every person convicted thereof is liable to suffer punishment as provided in subsection (2). Quiconque en est condamné encourt la peine prévue au paragraphe (2).

- [10] For offences other than murder, manslaughter, or an offence under sections 280 to 283 of the Criminal Code, committed in Canada, individuals subject to the Code of Service Discipline may be tried in the military justice system: NDA, section 70.
- [11] The NDA contains numerous provisions governing offences in the Code of Service Discipline, including detailed sentencing provisions. The general provisions in the NDA on sentencing lie at the heart of this appeal and are therefore reproduced at length. They read in relevant part as follows: Service trial of civil offences Procès militaire pour infractions civiles 130 (1) An act or omission 130 (1) Constitue une infraction à la présente section tout acte ou omission :
- (a) that takes place in Canada and is punishable under Part VII, the Criminal Code or any other Act of Parliament, or

Quiconque en est condamné encourt la peine prévue au paragraphe (2). Punishment Peine
 - (2) Subject to subsection (3), if a court martial convicts a person under subsection (1), it shall,

Objectives Objectifs
- (2) The fundamental purpose of sentencing is to be achieved by imposing just punishments that have one or more of the following objectives:
- (2) L'atteinte de cet objectif essentiel se fait par l'infliction de peines justes visant un ou plusieurs des objectifs suivants :
- (a) to promote a habit of obedience to lawful commands and orders;
 - a) renforcer le devoir d'obéissance aux ordres légitimes;
 - (b) to maintain public trust in the Canadian Forces as a disciplined armed force;

- b) maintenir la confiance du public dans les Forces canadiennes en tant que force armée disciplinée;
- (c) to denounce unlawful conduct and the harm done to victims or to the community that is caused by unlawful conduct;
- c) dénoncer les comportements illégaux et le tort causé par ceux-ci aux victimes ou à la collectivité;
- (d) to deter offenders and other persons from committing offences;
- d) dissuader les contrevenants et autres personnes de commettre des infractions;
- (e) to assist in rehabilitating offenders;
- e) favoriser la réinsertion sociale des contrevenants;
- (f) to assist in reintegrating offenders into military service;
- f) favoriser la réinsertion des contrevenants dans la vie militaire;
- (g) to separate offenders, if necessary, from other officers or non-commissioned members or from society generally;
- g) isoler, au besoin, les contrevenants des autres officiers et militaires du rang ou de la société en général;
- (h) to provide reparations for harm done to victims or to the community; and
- h) assurer la réparation des torts causés aux victimes ou à la collectivité;
- (i) to promote a sense of responsibility in offenders and an acknowledgment of the harm done to victims or to the community.
- i) susciter le sens des responsabilités chez les contrevenants, notamment par la reconnaissance des dommages causés à la victime ou à la collectivité. Fundamental principle of sentencing Principe fondamental 203.2 A sentence must be proportionate to the gravity of the offence and the degree of responsibility of the offender. 203.2 La peine est proportionnelle à la gravité de l'infraction et au degré de responsabilité du contrevenant. - (e) any indirect consequences of the finding of guilty or the sentence should be taken into consideration.
- e) la prise en compte des conséquences indirectes du verdict de culpabilité ou de la sentence.

[12] In addition to the foregoing, certain provisions in the Criminal Code and NDA in respect of orders of prohibition and ancillary orders are relevant.

[13] More specifically, subsection 320.24(4) of the Criminal Code provides civilian judges sitting under the Criminal Code with discretion to impose a driving prohibition following a dangerous driving conviction. The subsection states in relevant part: Discretionary order of prohibition — other offences Ordonnance d'interdiction discrétionnaire — diverses infractions

- (4) If an offender is found guilty of an offence under section 320.13 [...], the court that sentences the offender may, in addition to any other punishment that may be imposed for that offence, make an order prohibiting the offender from operating the type of conveyance in question during a period to be determined in accordance with subsection (5).
- (4) Le tribunal qui inflige une peine au contrevenant déclaré coupable d'une infraction prévue à l'article 320.13, [...] peut rendre, en plus de toute autre peine applicable à cette infraction, une ordonnance lui interdisant de conduire le moyen de transport en cause durant la période établie conformément au paragraphe (5).

[14] Many other punishments in the Criminal Code are mandatory in nature. One of them is a weapons prohibition order, which is mandatory under section 109 of the Criminal Code, following a conviction for one of the offences listed in the section. Under section 113 of the Criminal Code, a person subject to or who would be subject to a firearms prohibition order may apply to have the order lifted or not imposed if they need to use a firearm to hunt or trap to sustain their family or if the order "would constitute a virtual prohibition against employment in the only vocation open to the person". Subsection 109(1) of the Criminal Code provides as follows: Mandatory prohibition order Ordonnance d'interdiction obligatoire 109 (1) Where a person is convicted, or discharged under section 730, of [listed offences] the court that sentences the person or directs that the person be discharged, as the case may be, shall, in addition to any other punishment that may be imposed for that offence or any other condition prescribed in the order of discharge, make an order prohibiting the person from possessing any firearm, cross-bow, prohibited weapon, restricted weapon, prohibited device, firearm part, ammunition, prohibited ammunition and explosive substance during the period specified in the order as determined in accordance with subsection (2) or (3), as the case may be. [emphasis added] 109 (1) Le tribunal doit, en plus de toute autre peine qu'il lui inflige ou de toute autre condition qu'il lui impose dans l'ordonnance d'absolution, rendre une ordonnance interdisant au contrevenant d'avoir en sa possession des armes à feu, arbalètes, armes prohibées, armes à autorisation restreinte, dispositifs prohibés, pièces d'arme à feu, munitions, munitions prohibées et substances explosives pour la période fixée en application des paragraphes (2) ou (3), lorsqu'il le déclare coupable ou l'absout en vertu de l'article 730, selon le cas : [infractions répertoriées] [non-souligné dans l'original]

- [15] The NDA, on the other hand, contains no provision for driving prohibition orders and in section 147.1 affords discretion to make weapons prohibition orders, which are not mandatory under the NDA, unlike under the Criminal Code. In addition, subsection 147.1(3) of the NDA provides that any firearms prohibition order does not prohibit officers or non-commissioned members of the CAF from possessing firearms necessary for performance of their duties. Subsection 147.1(1) of the NDA states: Prohibition order Ordonnance d'interdiction 147.1 (1) If a court martial considers it desirable, in the interests of the safety of an offender or of any other person, it shall — in addition to any other punishment that may be imposed for the offence — make an order prohibiting the offender from possessing any firearm, cross-bow, prohibited weapon, restricted weapon, prohibited device, ammunition, prohibited ammunition or explosive substance, or all such things, on convicting or discharging absolutely the offender of [offences omitted] [emphasis added] 147.1 (1) La cour martiale doit, si elle en arrive à la conclusion qu'il est souhaitable pour la sécurité du contrevenant ou pour celle d'autrui de le faire, en plus de toute autre peine qu'elle lui inflige, rendre une ordonnance lui interdisant d'avoir en sa possession des armes à feu, arbalètes, armes prohibées, armes à autorisation restreinte, dispositifs prohibés, munitions, munitions prohibées et substances explosives, ou l'un ou plusieurs de ces objets, lorsqu'elle le déclare coupable ou l'absout inconditionnellement, selon le cas : [infractions répertoriées] [non-souligné dans l'original]
- [16] Both the NDA and the Criminal Code contain provisions for ancillary Sex Offender Information Registration Act, S.C. 2004, c. 10 [SOIRA] orders and orders for taking samples for forensic DNA analysis. The SOIRA order provisions in the NDA are different from those in the Criminal Code: see sections 490.012–490.02911 of the Criminal Code as compared to sections 227.01–227.14 of the NDA. III. The Parties' Arguments [17] The prosecution argues that the text of section 130 of the NDA is clear and in subparagraph 130(2)(b)(i) provides discretionary authority to a court martial to impose any punishment open to a judge sitting under the Criminal Code, including discretionary punishments like driving prohibition orders for dangerous driving convictions, conditional sentences, and probation orders (none of which are provided for in the NDA).

- [18] To understand the prosecution's argument, it is useful to repeat subsection 130(2) of the NDA: Punishment Peine
- (2) Subject to subsection (3), if a court martial convicts a person under subsection (1), it shall,
 - (2) Sous réserve du paragraphe (3), la peine infligée à quiconque est condamné aux termes du paragraphe (1) est :
 - (a) if the conviction was in respect of an offence
 - a) la peine minimale prescrite par la disposition législative correspondante, dans le cas d'une infraction :
 - (i) committed in Canada under Part VII, the Criminal Code or any other Act of Parliament and for which a minimum punishment is prescribed, or
 - (i) commise au Canada en violation de la partie VII de la présente loi, du Code criminel ou de toute autre loi fédérale et pour laquelle une peine minimale est prescrite, (ii) committed outside Canada under section 235 of the Criminal Code, (ii) commise à l'étranger et prévue à l'article 235 du Code criminel ; impose a punishment in accordance with the enactment prescribing the minimum punishment for the offence; or vide
 - (b) in any other case,
 - b) dans tout autre cas :
 - (i) impose the punishment prescribed for the offence by Part VII, the Criminal Code or that other Act, or
 - (i) soit la peine prévue pour l'infraction par la partie VII de la présente loi, le Code criminel ou toute autre loi pertinente, (ii) impose dismissal with disgrace from Her Majesty's service or less punishment. (ii) soit, comme peine maximale, la destitution ignominieuse du service de Sa Majesté.
- [19] The prosecution submits that paragraph 130(2)(a) of the NDA requires imposition of the mandatory minimum punishments prescribed in the legislation creating the offence whereas subparagraph 130(2)(b)(i) of the NDA affords a court martial discretion to impose any punishment prescribed in Part VII of the NDA, the Criminal Code, or other legislation, for offences for which no minimum punishment is prescribed. The prosecution reads "prescribed" in this paragraph broadly to mean "contemplated" by the relevant legislation such that the sentencing authority afforded to courts martial would encompass all punishments that could be imposed under the legislation creating the offence. From this, according to the prosecution, it would follow that courts martial may impose the full range of sentences that civilian judges may impose. Thus, according to the prosecution, courts martial possess a wide range of sentencing options, including all those possessed by civilian judges as well as all those listed in the NDA. Where there is a difference between the punishments provided in the NDA and those provided in the Criminal Code, as notably is the case with firearms prohibition orders, the prosecution says that the provisions in the NDA must be understood as only applying to purely military offences or, because they are more specific, are to be read as the only punishments applicable under the Code of Service Discipline.

- [20] The prosecution argues that the broader context in the NDA supports its interpretation, contrasting the wording used by Parliament in paragraph 130(2)(b) of the NDA with that used in subsection 132(2) in respect of offences committed outside Canada that are offences under the law of the jurisdiction where they were committed. For the offences governed by subsection 132(2) of the NDA, Parliament provided that “the court martial shall impose the punishment in the scale of punishments that it considers appropriate” having regard to the factors listed in the subsection. The prosecution submits that, had Parliament intended to limit military judges to imposing punishments for offences committed in Canada to those listed in section 139 and elsewhere in the NDA, it would have used similar wording, confining punishment authority to the scale and type of punishments listed in the NDA. In the absence of any such wording, the prosecution argues that the plain wording of subparagraph 130(2)(b)(i) of the NDA should govern, which, as noted, the prosecution claims supports its conclusion that courts martial possess discretion to impose the full range of penalties that may be imposed by civilian judges under the Criminal Code or other federal legislation.
- [21] Finally, the prosecution says that the case law of this Court and of the Supreme Court of Canada that states that sentencing options available in the military justice system are different from those in the civilian system is not binding because the range of sentencing options available to courts martial was not squarely at issue in those cases.
- [22] The respondent, on the other hand, underscores that the military and civilian justice systems are different and serve different goals as provided by subsections 203.1(1) and (2) of the NDA. The respondent adds that the case law has long recognized the different nature of the military and civilian justice systems, and that many cases have highlighted that an important difference between the two involves the fact that different sentencing principles apply and that different options are available for sentencing in the two systems.
- [23] Turning to the wording of the relevant provisions in the NDA, the respondent agrees that paragraph 130(2)(a) of the NDA requires imposition by a court martial of a minimum sentence where the provision creating the offence requires the imposition of such a sentence. However, in contrast to the prosecution, according to the respondent, paragraph 130(1)(b) of the NDA incorporates the maximum penalties, thereby ensuring that the relevant maximums are the same in the two systems. In support of this reading, the respondent points to the French version of subparagraph 130(2)(b)(ii) of the NDA which uses the words “comme peine maximale, la destitution ignominieuse du service de sa Majesté”, which, the respondent says, demonstrates that the paragraph sets out the maximum punishments that may be imposed but does not grant sentencing options outside the list of punishments in section 139 and elsewhere in the NDA.

- [24] More specifically, according to the respondent, paragraph 130(2)(b) of the NDA operates to require that a court martial not exceed the maximum punishment established by civilian legislation where it is of greater severity than dismissal with disgrace in the list of punishments in section 139 of the NDA. The respondent gives as an example the maximum sentence for sexual assault, which is 14 years in the Criminal Code. According to the respondent, the combined effect of subparagraphs 130(2)(b)(i) and (ii) of the NDA allows a court martial to impose a sentence of imprisonment of up to 14 years for a sexual assault conviction. Conversely, according to the respondent, for a straight summary conviction offence where civilian legislation sets an upper limit of 6 months imprisonment, a court martial may impose, but not exceed, the upper limit of dismissal with disgrace from the CAF. According to the respondent, this permits courts martial to impose heavier sentences than civilian judges for offences that are more serious in the military context if they have implications for discipline, efficiency, and morale in the CAF that merit a harsher sentence.
- [25] In support of this reading, the respondent points to the inclusion of two punishments in the scale of punishments in section 139 of the NDA incorporated into subparagraph 130(2)(b)(ii) of the NDA that also appear in the Criminal Code: imprisonment for less than two years and fines. According to the respondent, this overlap means that one cannot read subparagraphs 130(2)(b)(i) and (ii) of the NDA as setting out two distinct menus from which the court martial may choose, as the prosecution does, because it makes no sense to repeat the same punishments in subparagraphs 130(2)(b)(i) and (ii) of the NDA.
- [26] The respondent also points to the differing provision on weapons prohibition orders in the NDA and Criminal Code, noting that paragraph 147.1(1)(d) of the NDA states that it applies to offences under the Criminal Code, making it clear that the NDA contains its own distinct regime for firearms prohibition. From this, the respondent infers that one should understand that all punishments that may be imposed under the Code of Service Discipline are set out in the NDA. The respondent also notes the existence of provisions in both the NDA and Criminal Code on ancillary orders, like SOIRA orders and orders for taking samples for forensic DNA analysis, in support of its contention that the NDA contains its own, distinct sentencing regime.
- [27] Further, the respondent notes that the NDA has its own driving-related offences and does not provide for driving prohibition orders. Thus, there is no possibility of imposing a driving prohibition order for a military driving offence. From this, according to the respondent, one should conclude that Parliament did not intend for courts martial to impose driving prohibition orders. The respondent adds that there are practical reasons why this is so, including the lack of regulations to support a driving prohibition and the fact that such prohibition would limit the ability of many CAF members to carry out their duties.
- [28] The respondent also argues that the legislative history of the sentencing provisions in the NDA support its interpretation. Where additional sentencing powers were required, Parliament amended the NDA to incorporate them into the statute, as it did with relatively recent amendments that allow military courts to now impose absolute discharges and intermittent sentences: Bill C-77, An Act to amend the National Defence Act and to make related and consequential amendments to other Acts, 1st Sess, 42nd Parl, 2019 (Royal Assent June 21, 2019) at subparas. 63(21)(i) and 63(21)(j) and ss. 63(5) [Bill C-77].

- [29] Finally, the respondent submits that any ambiguity in subsection 130(2) of the NDA should favour its interpretation, which is more favourable to those accused of offences in the military justice system. IV. Analysis [30] I find some of the respondent's arguments persuasive and would interpret paragraph 130(2)(b) of the NDA in the way the respondent suggests.
- [31] It is well-established that the "the words of an Act are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament" (E. A. Driedger, Construction of Statutes (2nd ed. 1983), at p. 87, quoted in Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), 1998 CanLII 837 (SCC), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27, at para. 21; Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, 2002 SCC 42, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559 at para. 26; La Presse inc. v. Quebec, 2023 SCC 22 at para. 22). The starting point for the statutory construction exercise is the wording of the provision in issue as "the language of statutory provisions, seen in light of their context and purpose, is the anchor in the statutory interpretation process": R. v. Allison, 2025 CMAC 3 at para. 11, citing Quebec (Commission des droits de la personne et des droits de la jeunesse) v. Directrice de la protection de la jeunesse du CISSS A, 2024 SCC 43, 498 D.L.R. (4th) 316 at para. 24. A. Consideration of the text of paragraph 130(2)(b) of the NDA [32] A review of the text of paragraph 130(2)(b) of the NDA demonstrates that the prosecution's reading of the paragraph cannot stand.
- [33] The overlap between the sentencing options in subparagraphs 130(2)(b)(i) and (ii) means that the two provisions cannot be understood as offering two suites of alternatives from which a court martial may choose where there is no prescribed mandatory sentence, as the prosecution suggests. The only way of reconciling the overlap in punishments between subparagraphs 130(2)(b)(i) and (ii) is if one reads subparagraph 130(2)(b)(ii) as setting forth maximum punishments in the manner the respondent submits.
- [34] Central to this determination is the presence of the word "or" between subparagraphs 130(2)(b)(i) and (ii) of the NDA. The use of this word indicates that the two paragraphs are to be understood as offering different options. As noted by Ruth Sullivan in The Construction of Statutes, 7th ed (Toronto: LexisNexis Canada, 2022) [Construction of Statutes] at page 98, "[c]ourts often declare that 'and' is conjunctive and 'or' is disjunctive, but to avoid absurdity they must sometimes read 'and' as if it said 'or' — or vice versa". In the present case, no absurdity results from reading the "or" between paragraphs 130(2)(b)(i) and (ii) of the NDA disjunctively. Rather, an absurdity would result if "or" were read conjunctively, since it would be redundant to list the same punishments twice. Thus, the text of subparagraphs 130(2)(b)(i) and (ii) of the NDA supports the respondent's reading of the provision.

- [35] That paragraph 130(2)(b) of the NDA sets out maximum penalties is reinforced by the wording in French of subparagraph 130(2)(b)(ii) of the NDA, which uses the terms “peine maximale”. Under the shared meaning rule of statutory interpretation, the interpretation which is the same in both languages is adopted if it is decisive: Sullivan, Construction of Statutes, at pp. 188–99. Although there is no conflict between the English and the French versions of paragraph 130(2)(b) of the NDA, the use of the words “maximum penalty” (“peine maximale”) in French supports the reading of the provision as setting forth maximum penalties.
- [36] It therefore follows that the text of subsection 130(2) and, in particular, the text in paragraph 130(2)(b), supports the conclusion that the subsection does not afford courts martial sentencing powers to impose discretionary punishments that are absent from the NDA and contained only in the Criminal Code or another Act of Parliament.
- [37] I leave for another day the determination of whether subsection 130(2) (and in particular paragraph 130(2)(a)) of the NDA would allow for the imposition of a mandatory punishment prescribed only in the Criminal Code, as, for example, would be the case with an impaired driving conviction, which, under the Criminal Code, carries a mandatory driving prohibition punishment by virtue of subsection 320.24(1) of the Criminal Code. It is sufficient for the purposes of this appeal to hold that subsection 130(2) of the NDA does not afford courts martial jurisdiction to impose discretionary penalties set out in other federal legislation that are absent from the NDA. B. Consideration of the relevant context [38] The broader context of the NDA, the legislative evolution of the sentencing provisions in the NDA, and the case law all support this reading of paragraph 130(2)(b) of the NDA.
- [39] Turning to provisions elsewhere in the NDA, the most significant are those involving weapons prohibitions. Weapons and driving prohibition orders are punishments: R. v. Poulin, 2019 SCC 47, [2019] 3 S.C.R. 566 at para. 38; R. v. Wolfe, 2024 SCC 34 at para. 36. The different provisions on weapons prohibitions in the NDA and Criminal Code highlight Parliament’s intent that the weapons prohibition punishment be applied differently to those subject to the Code of Service Discipline tried in the military justice system, which makes eminent sense as the duties of many CAF members require the use of firearms. In addition, although not determinative of the interpretive issue in this appeal, the fact that there are separate provisions in the NDA and Criminal Code for weapons prohibition orders supports the conclusion that the types of sentencing options for those charged in the military justice system are to be found in the NDA and not the Criminal Code.
- [40] Likewise, the presence in the NDA of provisions for ancillary SOIRA orders and for orders for taking DNA samples for forensic purposes supports the conclusion that the NDA contains its own suite of sentencing options. Rather than merely incorporating the provisions in the Criminal Code for these sorts of orders, Parliament chose to set them out in the NDA and, in the case of SOIRA orders, in different terms from those in the Criminal Code: see sections 490.012–490.02911 of the Criminal Code as compared to sections 227.01–227.14 of the NDA.

- [41] Similarly, the absence of several discretionary sentencing options in the NDA that are present in the Criminal Code also supports the conclusion that the types of sentencing options for those charged in the military justice system are to be found in the NDA.
- [42] I do not see that subsection 132(2) of the NDA, relied upon by the prosecution, supports a different interpretation. Contrary to what the prosecution suggests, this subsection is necessary to exclude punishments foreign to Canadian law, that may be in effect in other jurisdictions, such as capital punishment. That is why the subsection is needed to limit the punishments to those listed in section 139 of the NDA.
- [43] The broader context of the legislative evolution of the sentencing provisions in the NDA and the case law from the Supreme Court of Canada and this Court also support this interpretation of paragraph 130(2)(b) and confirms that the NDA contains its own distinct sentencing regime.
- [44] As the respondent rightly notes, when Parliament wished to provide additional sentencing powers to military tribunals or to clarify how those powers are to be exercised, it made amendments to the NDA.
- [45] In 1972, to address concerns that those subject to the Code of Service Discipline might not receive sentences for murder commensurate with those for murder committed in Canada, Parliament amended what is now section 130 of the NDA to ensure that the minimum sentence for murder under the Criminal Code would be imposed by service tribunals for murders committed, tried, and charged outside of Canada.
- [46] Prior to the amendments, subsection 119(2) of the 1950 version of the NDA provided: 119 (2) Subject to subsection three, where a service tribunal convicts a person under subsection one, the service tribunal shall, 119 (2) Sous réserve du paragraphe (3), un tribunal militaire déclarant une personne coupable aux termes du paragraphe (1) doit,
- (a) If under Part XII of this Act, the Criminal Code or other Act of Parliament of Canada, a minimum penalty is prescribed, impose a penalty in accordance with the enactment prescribing that minimum penalty; or
 - a) si la Partie XII de la présente loi, le Code criminel ou une autre loi du Parlement du Canada fixe une peine minimum, infliger une peine conformément à la disposition législative qui prescrit cette peine minimum; ou
 - (b) in any other case,
 - b) dans tout autre cas,
 - (i) impose the penalty prescribed for the offence by Part XII of this Act, the Criminal Code or that other Act; or

- (i) infliger la peine prévue pour l'infraction par la Partie XII de la présente loi, le Code criminel ou l'autre loi pertinente, ou (ii) impose dismissal with disgrace from His Majesty's service or less punishment. (ii) infliger la destitution ignominieuse du service de Sa Majesté ou une moindre peine.
 - (3) All provisions of the Code of Service Discipline in respect of a punishment of death, imprisonment for two years or more, imprisonment for less than two years, and a fine, shall apply in respect of penalties imposed under paragraph (a), or subparagraph (i) of paragraph (b) of subsection two.
 - (3) Toutes les dispositions du Code de discipline militaire visant la peine de mort, l'emprisonnement pour deux ans ou plus, l'emprisonnement pour moins de deux ans et l'amende s'appliquent à l'égard des peines infligées sous le régime de l'alinéa a) ou du sous-alinéa (i) de l'alinéa b) du paragraphe (2).
- [47] Subsequent amendments in 1970 to the NDA (then, the National Defence Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. N-4) led to section 120(2) of the NDA (as the provision was renumbered), which read as follows: 120 (2) Subject to subsection (3), where a service tribunal convicts a person under subsection (1), the service tribunal shall, 120(2) Sous réserve du paragraphe (3), un tribunal militaire déclarant une personne coupable aux termes du paragraphe (1) doit,
- (a) if the conviction was in respect of an offence committed in Canada, and under Part XII of this Act, the Criminal Code or other Act of Parliament of Canada, a minimum penalty is prescribed; or
 - a) si la déclaration de culpabilité est relative à une infraction commise au Canada et si, en vertu de la Partie XII de la présente loi, du Code criminel ou d'une autre loi du Parlement du Canada, une peine minimum est prescrite, infliger une peine conformément à la disposition législative qui prescrit cette peine minimum ; ou
 - (b) in any other case,
 - b) dans tout autre cas,
 - (i) impose the penalty prescribed for the offence by Part XII of this Act, the Criminal Code or that other Act; or
 - (i) infliger la peine prévue pour l'infraction par la Partie XII de la présente loi, le Code criminel ou l'autre loi pertinente, ou (ii) impose dismissal with disgrace from His Majesty's service or less punishment. (ii) infliger la destitution ignominieuse du service de Sa majesté ou une moindre peine.
- [48] In 1972, clause 73 of Bill C-2, An Act to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act, 4th Sess, 28th Parl, 1972, modified paragraph 120(2)(a) of the NDA to the following:

73. Paragraph 120(2)(a) of the National Defence Act is repealed and the following substituted thereof:
73. L'alinéa 120(2)a) de la Loi sur la défense nationale est abrogé et remplacé par ce qui suit: "(a) if the conviction was in respect of an offence « a) si la déclaration de culpabilité est relative à une infraction
- (i) committed in Canada, under Part XII of this Act, the Criminal Code or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada and for which a minimum punishment is prescribed, or
- (i) commise au Canada, sous le régime de la Partie XII de la présente loi, du Code criminel ou de toute autre loi du Parlement du Canada, et pour laquelle une peine minimum est prescrite, ou (ii) committed outside Canada under section 218 of the Criminal Code, (ii) commise hors du Canada sous le régime de l'article 218 du Code criminel, impose a punishment in accordance with the enactment prescribing the minimum punishment for the offence; or" infliger une peine en conformité de la disposition législative qui prescrit la peine minimum pour l'infraction ; ou, »
- [49] Government speakers stated as follows before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs when the proposed amendments were being studied: Mr Lang: Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment will ensure that on conviction for murder a serviceman will be sentenced to punishment for that offence prescribed in the Criminal Code. Mr. Christie: Under the National Defence Act as it is now framed, you could, on a conviction for murder, impose a reprimand. It is just an oversight in the drafting of the National Defence Act that we are rectifying here. ("Bill C-2, An Act to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act", House of Commons, Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, 28-4, No 7 (11 May 1972) at 7:36 (The Honourable Otto Lang and Donald H. Christie)).
- [50] Again in 2019, Parliament amended the NDA to include absolute discharge and intermittent sentences as sentencing options in the NDA: Bill C-77. The Criminal Code already contained provisions allowing for imposition of absolute discharges and intermittent sentences: see subsections 730(1) and 732(1) of the Criminal Code. The amendments to the NDA made in 2019 aligned with recommendations and criticisms made in reports submitted to the Minister of National Defense: see The Honourable Patrick J. LeSage, Report of the Second Independent Review Authority to The Honourable Peter G. MacKay Minister of National Defence, submitted to the Minister of National Defence (December 2011), [LeSage Report] at p. 26, see also Recommendation 13; The Right Honourable Antonio Lamer P.C., C.C., C.D., The First Independent Review by the Right Honourable Antonio Lamer P.C., C.C., C.D. of the provisions and operation of Bill C-25, An Act to amend the National Defence Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, as required under section 96 of Statutes of Canada 1998, c.35, submitted to the Minister of National Defence (3 September 2003), at p.

65, see also Recommendation 52.

- [51] The 2019 amendments to the NDA to provide military judges with the sentencing options of absolute discharge and intermittent sentences would not have been required if paragraph 130(2)(b) of the NDA were to be interpreted in the way the prosecution suggests, as under its interpretation, the jurisdiction to impose these sentences would already have been vested in military judges. As noted by Sullivan at page 629 (Construction of Statutes), although the presumption may be rebutted, [i]t is presumed that amendments to the wording of a legislative provision are made for some intelligible purpose: to clarify meaning, to correct a mistake, to change the law. A legislature would not go to the trouble and expense of amending a provision without any reason.
- [52] Thus, the legislative history of the sentencing provisions in the Criminal Code supports the interpretation that paragraph 130(2)(b)(i) of the NDA does not import all the sentencing provisions in the Criminal Code into the Code of Service Discipline.
- [53] The case law also supports the respondent's position that the military justice system is different from the civilian justice system and encompasses distinct sentencing provisions and principles. The case law of the Supreme Court of Canada and of this Court are replete with examples of where these points are made and where the Courts have accepted that courts martial are limited to the sentences set out in the NDA. Contrary to what the prosecution asserts, these statements cannot be relegated to non-binding comments.
- [54] For example, in Stillman, the Supreme Court underscored that offences under the Criminal Code or other statutes become offences under military law when committed by those who are subject to the Code of Service Discipline and tried by a military tribunal. The Court noted that military offences are sentenced differently than offences tried in a civilian court. In rejecting the requirement of a military nexus before offences may be tried before a military tribunal, Justices Moldaver and Brown, writing for the majority, stated at paragraphs 100–101:
- [100] ... were serious civil offences committed by persons subject to the CSD to be streamed into the civilian justice system, sentencing decisions in those cases might not truly account for the seriousness of such offences, seen in light of the purposes of discipline, efficiency, and morale. As Cattnach J. recognized in MacKay v. Rippon, 1977 CanLII 3028 (FC), [1978] 1 F.C. 233 (T.D.), “[m]any offences which are punishable under civil law take on a much more serious connotation as a service offence and as such warrant more severe punishment” (p. 236, quoted in Généreux, at p. 294). The proper maintenance of military discipline, efficiency, and morale may require a more severe response to misconduct than it would receive in the civilian justice system. Indeed, the fundamental purposes of sentencing in the military justice system differ from those in the civilian criminal justice system. These purposes, set out in s. 203.1(1) of the NDA, are (a) “to promote the operational effectiveness of the Canadian Forces by contributing to the maintenance of discipline, efficiency and morale”; and (b) “to contribute to respect for the law and the maintenance of a just, peaceful and safe society”. Furthermore, s. 203.1(2) of the NDA stipulates that these purposes “shall be achieved by imposing just sanctions that have one or more of the following objectives”:

- (a) to promote a habit of obedience to lawful commands and orders;
- (b) to maintain public trust in the Canadian Forces as a disciplined armed force;
- (c) to denounce unlawful conduct;
- (d) to deter offenders and other persons from committing offences;
- (e) to assist in rehabilitating offenders;
- (f) to assist in reintegrating offenders into military service;
- (g) to separate offenders, if necessary, from other officers or non-commissioned members or from society generally;
- (h) to provide reparations for harm done to victims or to the community; and
- (i) to promote a sense of responsibility in offenders, and an acknowledgment of the harm done to victims and to the community.

[101] While some of these objectives are reflected in s. 718 of the Criminal Code (e.g., rehabilitating offenders), others are not (e.g., promoting a habit of obedience to lawful commands and orders). Thus, sentencing in the military justice system is guided by certain objectives that are unique to the military milieu. [emphasis added]

[55] In discussing the factual background in Stillman, the majority at paragraph 51 noted that the LeSage Report had recommended a “...comprehensive review of the sentencing provisions of the NDA, with a view to making these provisions more closely mirror the flexible range of punishments in the civilian criminal justice system”. This statement would not have been made (nor the LeSage Report recommendation, itself, been made) if a flexible range of punishments were already incorporated into paragraph 130(2)(b)(i) of the NDA in the manner the prosecution suggests.

[56] To somewhat similar effect, in Edwards at paragraph 61, Justice Kasirer, writing for the majority, described the sentences that may be imposed by a military tribunal on those subject to the Code of Service Discipline in the following terms: [m]embers who are found guilty of service offences may be subject to a range of sanctions ranging in severity from minor punishments to imprisonment for life (NDA, s. 139). The available sentences include dismissal from service with disgrace and dismissal without disgrace (s. 139(1)(c) and (e)).

[57] Notably, Justice Kasirer made no mention of sentencing options that exist only in the Criminal Code.

- [58] This Court has also highlighted the differing sentencing provisions available to military tribunals under the Code of Service Discipline.
- [59] In R. v. Dixon, 2005 CMAC 2, 7 C.M.A.R. 4, Justice Létourneau, writing for the Court stated at paragraphs 21–22:
- [21] Of course, many of these sentences imposed by civilian courts are not available to military judges. The range of sentences authorized by section 139 of the Act does not include absolute or conditional discharge, conditional sentences, suspended sentence, imprisonment served in the community or probation. ...
- [22] As a matter of fact, former Chief Justice Lamer, who conducted the first independent review of the functioning of Bill C-25 that amended the National Defence Act, recommended that a more flexible range of punishments and sanctions be made available to military courts as is available under the civilian criminal justice system: see The First Independent Review of the provisions and operation of Bill C-25, An Act to amend the National Defence Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, September 3, 2003, pages 65 and 66. [emphasis added]
- [60] Similarly, in R. v. Trépanier, 2008 CMAC 3, 7 C.M.A.R. 180, this Court stated:
- [33] The transformation of Criminal Code offences into military offences by making them service offences through sections 2 and 130 of the NDA is not without consequences for a person accused before a military tribunal. A number of derogations and loss of rights and benefits ensues. [...]
- [36] An accused convicted by a court martial for Criminal Code offences is also deprived of a variety of sentences which would be available to him if he or she were tried before a civilian court. Absolute discharge (section 730 of the Criminal Code), conditional discharge (ibidem), condition sentences whereby the sentence of imprisonment is served in the community (section 742.1 of the Criminal Code), conditional sentence order (section 742.3 of the Criminal Code), intermittent sentence (section 732 of the Criminal Code) and suspended sentence with probation (section 731 of the Criminal Code) are not part of the range of sentences that a court martial can impose pursuant to section 139 of the NDA: see Dixon v. Her Majesty the Queen, supra, at paragraphs 21 and 22. [emphasis added]
- [61] In R. v. Ellis, 2010 CMAC 3, 7 C.M.A.R. 433, the constitutionality of the sentencing regime in the NDA was challenged and found to be valid. In describing that regime, Justice Létourneau, again writing for the Court, noted at paragraph 24:
- [24] While the Code of Service Discipline over the years has extended its scope of application to all civilian offences, except murder, manslaughter and the abduction of children when these offences are committed in Canada (see section 70 of the Act), the range and scale of punishments provided by section 139 of the Act have not followed and benefited from the evolution of the sentencing options now available to civilian courts.

- [62] In R. v. Darrigan, 2020 CMAC 1, 8 C.M.A.R. 406, the prosecution argued that the military judge had erred in applying this Court's military jurisprudence rather than following certain civilian sentencing precedents. This Court disagreed. Writing for the Court, Justice Saunders stated at paragraphs 26–27 and 33:
- [26] I will begin my analysis by emphasizing the importance of a separate system of military justice in preserving discipline, efficiency and morale. This function is of course essential in maintaining a state of readiness on the part of the Canadian Armed Forces in the defence of our nation's security. Respectfully, the Crown's attachment in this appeal to the civilian model of sentencing ignores the fundamental role of Canada's military and the disciplinary code which binds its members.
- [27] In a long line of cases, the Supreme Court has provided clear and consistent direction with respect to the significance and necessity of a separate system of justice required to maintain the morale, discipline and efficiency of our Canadian Armed Forces. [Discussion of the case law omitted]
- [33] The first and most obvious is the different statutory regime within which the prosecution chose to proceed with its charges against PO2 Darrigan. Having made that choice, the procedures and penalties relevant to the prosecution of PO2 Darrigan are codified in “Part III, Code of Service Discipline” commencing at s. 60 of the NDA. Following his guilty pleas, the sentencing provisions found in “Division 7.1 Sentencing” were triggered. Here we see some very significant differences in the approach taken to sentencing when comparing the military and civilian justice systems. [emphasis added]
- [63] From the foregoing, it is apparent that the approach of the prosecution in the instant appeal contradicts a long line of case law, holding that the sentencing options open to courts martial are found in the NDA and are different from those in the Criminal Code.
- [64] Thus, the contextual factors all support the conclusion that paragraph 130(2)(b) of the NDA does not provide authority to impose discretionary punishments that are not found in the NDA but only in the Criminal Code or other federal legislation. C. Consideration of the purpose of the provisions at issue [65] The purpose of the provisions at issue, and indeed, of the entire Code of Service Discipline, is to maintain the discipline, efficiency, and morale of the CAF as is expressly stated in section 55 and subsection 203.1 of the NDA and as was noted, for example, in Stillman at paragraph 35, Moriarity at paragraph 46, and R. v. Généreux, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 259 at page 293. The case law makes it clear that this purpose is served by the distinct sentencing regime that applies in the military justice system, as the above citations illustrate. This purpose is served by the interpretation of paragraph 130(1)(b) of the NDA that I have determined appropriate and would not be served by the interpretation proposed by the prosecution.
- [66] Hence, the text, context, and purpose of the provisions at issue lead to the conclusion that the Military Judge correctly interpreted his sentencing authority and that this appeal must be dismissed. V. Proposed Disposition [67] For these reasons, I would dismiss this appeal.
