JUDGMENT

THE BAILIFF: 1. Barton, you were on temporary release from the prison and you had therefore been trusted to behave yourself and to comply with your obligations. You breached that trust of the Prison Governor. You knew that you were not allowed to go into a public house during the period of the exclusion order but you did so and if you ignore Court orders in that way and breach the trust placed in you by the Prison Governor then I am afraid you must expect to be punished. 2. The maximum penalty is one of six months imprisonment. We have read your letter carefully and we accept that the purpose of going into the pub was to seek employment and not to enjoy yourself. And we also accept that you admitted the offence immediately and have pleaded guilty. We feel able to give a little bit more allowance for the mitigating factors than the Crown Advocate has done and so you will be sentenced to two months' imprisonment to run consecutively to the sentence which you are currently serving.
